Officers learned a male subject had approached a female employee, working inside the store, from behind and hugged and kissed her. The employee confronted the subject, who didn't say anything but tried to hug the employee again. The subject denied having identification though he later produced a wallet and opened it at the request of the officer. The officer saw a driver's license in the wallet with a name different than what the subject had provided. The subject suddenly turned and tried to run away and the officer grabbed the subject, who continued to struggle to get away.
